

CHAUTEMPS NOT ABLE TO PRESENT A NEW CABINET

Balked in Efforts by Refusal of Three to Participate

MAKING PROGRESS

Personnel of Intended Cabinet
Is Announced, However

By Frederick K. Abbott

PARIS, Feb. 21.—Balked in his efforts to form a new cabinet by the refusal of the left Republican party to grant permission to three of its members to participate in his Government, Camille Chautemps, leader of the radical Socialists was unable today to present his provisional cabinet to President Gaston Doumergue.

However, M. Chautemps informed the President that he was making good progress and hoped to be able to present the names of those in his projected cabinet later in the day.

Early this morning M. Chautemps had announced the personnel of his intended cabinet. Included among those he named were M. Flandrin, for the Commerce portfolio, M. Pietri, for the Colonies portfolio and M. Ricolfi, for the portfolio of Pensions. All three had accepted invitations to enter his cabinet upon the condition that their party approved but the approval was not forthcoming.

PARIS, Feb. 21.—Camille Chautemps today completed a provisional cabinet which he will present to President Gaston Doumergue and then put before the Chamber of Deputies for ratification.

In addition to holding the premiership in the new government, the radical Socialist leader will also act as Minister of the Interior as did his predecessor, Andre Tardieu.

M. Chautemps announced that Aristide Briand, Foreign Minister in the Tardieu Cabinet, will retain the same post in the new government.

The other portfolios will be filled as follows:

Theodore Steeg, Minister of Justice.
Rene Besnard, Minister of War.
Albert Sarraud, Minister of Marine.
Charles Dumont or Lucien Lamoureux, Minister of Finance.

Edouard Daladier, Minister of Public Instruction.
Jean Durand, Minister of Public Works.

Doctor Queuille, Minister of Agriculture.
M. Flandrin, Minister of Commerce.
M. Pietri, Minister of Colonies.

Louis Loucheur, Minister of Labor.
Charles Danielou, Minister of Merchant Marine.

Georges Bonnet, Minister of Communications.
Laurent Eynac, Minister of Air.
Humbert Ricolfi, Minister of Pensions.

A safety meeting was recently held by the Rohm & Haas Men's Club at the "Inn." A speaker from Philadelphia gave a very interesting talk and an entertainment and refreshments were enjoyed.

CONGRESS FACES BITTER ROW ON PROHIBITION

Senate "Drys" Threaten To
"Blow Lid Off" Enforcement Regime

SCHEDULED NEXT WEEK

By William S. Neal
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent
WASHINGTON, Feb. 21.—With Senate "drys" threatening to "blow the lid off" the Federal prohibition enforcement regime and House wets claiming they are doing it, Congress today faced the session's most bitter row over prohibition scheduled for next week.

Both Senators Norris (R) of Nebraska and Wheeler (D) of Montana were pleading with colleagues for a "preliminary hearing" to show the necessity of adopting their resolutions for a nation-wide investigation of dry law enforcement.

Militant dries, they claimed they would present startling evidence to the Senate Judiciary Committee to justify their proposals.

House wets, having presented witnesses of prominence before the Judiciary Committee testifying that prohibition enforcement has broken down in city and rural sections alike, were gathering more evidence to be laid before the committee last week.

The insistence of Norris and Wheeler, together with that of many other leading Senate dries, indicated the Senate Judiciary Committee may authorize the proposed inquiry on Monday. The Norris resolution apparently was favored over Wheeler's which contained serious charges against the present enforcement regime.

Administration dries thus far have maintained a passive opposition only on the ground that the inquiry would Defeating the Fighting Five, 22-11, the Shamrocks took undisputed possession of first place in the A. O. H. League. The game was played on the Hibernians' floor last night.

Previous to the beginning of the game the two fives had been in a deadlock for the top position, each winning three and losing but one.

Failure to "put the skids" under "Jimmy" Lake accounted for the Fighters' loss. This youth, although closely guarded, looped the baskets for five double-deckers and made good on two penalty throws, totaling twelve points.

The Fighters gave the best they had but just could not cope with the "Pats," who are destined to finish up the second half in first position.

The second battle of the night in the A. O. H. League was between the Whoopies and Gypsies, and with the cellar position as the losing prize.

Both teams struggled hard and waged the fiercest game yet played in the league. Final calculation found the Whoopies with 25 points, just one more than the Gypsies.

The game was a free shooting contest, nineteen two-pointers and eleven fouls made during the evening.

"Gene" Lawler with twelve points was high scorer of the game. Ennis, with nine points, led the winners.

WASHINGTON, THE MAN, IS TOLD OF IN SPEECH BEFORE LOCAL EXCHANGE CLUB, AS THE GROUP IS ADDRESSED BY THE REV. GEORGE F. HESS

Man of Character Infinitely Better Than A Man of Brilliancy, Says Pastor of Bristol M. E. Church — Recounts Washington's Accomplishments Notwithstanding Difficulties

"The Life of George Washington" was the subject of an address delivered by the Rev. George F. Hess, pastor of the Bristol M. E. Church, at the regular weekly meeting of the Bristol Exchange Club last evening. He spoke in part as follows:

"Let the celebration of Washington's Birthday go forward. It is in accordance with the mind of the Great Ruler of the Universe who himself gives a crown to every true man, and who issues his royal decree that the righteous shall be held in everlasting remembrance. Let North and South be one in honoring the man. Let music and artillery grace his memory. Let mature scholarship praise the statesmanship of the eighteenth century. Let burning eloquence depict the glory and advance of the nation for which Washington lived. Let the voice of prayer reverently rise to heaven and commit the nation's future to the God who made the nation's past.

"That we may be helped and profit by the study of the theme of the evening, let us set before our minds:

"1. The story of George Washington; and then let us—

"2. Deduce from the story some lessons of Christian patriotism.

"Owing to the limit of our time, our picture of Washington this evening must be the merest charcoal sketch—an outline and nothing more. But in that outline we want the real Washington, and not the traditional Washington; not the idealized Washington; the prose Washington and not the poetic Washington; Washington, the man, not Washington, the myth; Washington as seen in the clear open sunlight, and not Washington as seen in the haze of eulogy. We protest against any tendency to starch and stiffen this plain, honest farmer, who was faulty in his grammar and elliptical in his spelling. Let Washington be kept humanized.

"For my part I have been accustomed to take comfort and heart from what Washington was not, as well as from what he was.

"He owed nothing to birth. No bluer blood flowed in his veins than that which flows in tens of thousands of living Americans. He was not a brilliant man, as men who rule and lead in the world of letters are brilliant. His was not the genius of intellect; his was the genius of character. I rejoice in this because the genius of character is attainable to all. The man who lives in right relations with the truth, and with the right, and with God, and who deals in noble and honest and brave things, can and does build up a true character. True character building is within the power of every mortal. But Washington was a providential man, you say. Yes, but so may you be a providential man if you will. Every man who yields himself up absolutely to God, and to the call of the hour, and who follows the openings of Providence is a providential man, in the full length and breadth and sweep of his life. He is as necessary a man in his place as George Washington ever was in his place.

"I do not regret that Washington was not a brilliant man. A man of character is infinitely better than a man of brilliancy. Ninety-nine times out of a hundred he will excel. Brilliant human lives are often like the thunder-bolt; they illumine, they dazzle, they show mighty power, but they keep the world in perpetual fear and anxiety, as to what the result of their living shall be. Nine times out of ten you will find them to be Napoleonic, and not Washingtonian. The difference between Napoleon and Washington is the difference between the iron heel and the helping hand; the difference between tyranny and freedom; the difference between a man living for self and a man living for broad humanity. Brilliant men are usually proud men, selfish men, tyrannical men. Too frequently they are all these.

"History gives a full record of Washington. He came into life in a plain fashion. His early education was somewhat like Abraham Lincoln's. Neither of these men saw the inside of a university. Washington went to a low grade of private school, taught by the parish sexton. He learned the three R's, but he never studied grammar. In his brother's house he studied a little geometry. This sums up all that the schools did for him.

"At the age of seventeen, Washington earned his livelihood as a surveyor of public lands. He followed the occupation for three years. This was a wholesome discipline. It made him physically, and when at the end of it, he stood forth six feet two inches, he was broad shouldered and full-chested, every inch of him a man.

COURT REFUSES PLEA OF MAN CAUGHT IN RAID

Judge Tells Defendant He Is Not Telling All He Knows
Of the Case

GETS JAIL SENTENCE

DOYLESTOWN, Feb. 21.—Louis Love, who told the Court he was a Philadelphia plasterer, pleaded guilty yesterday before Judge Hiram H. Keller to a charge of possessing and transporting sixteen five-gallon cans of alcohol in Southampton on the night of February 1.

District Attorney Arthur M. Eastburn informed the Court that although he had no definite information, it was rumored that Love and several other men operated a large still in the vicinity of Southampton.

A fine of $250 and three months in the county prison was imposed upon Love. Judge Keller told the defendant that he did not believe his story as told on the witness stand.

"You know a lot more than you told on the stand," Judge Keller remarked to Love in pronouncing sentence.

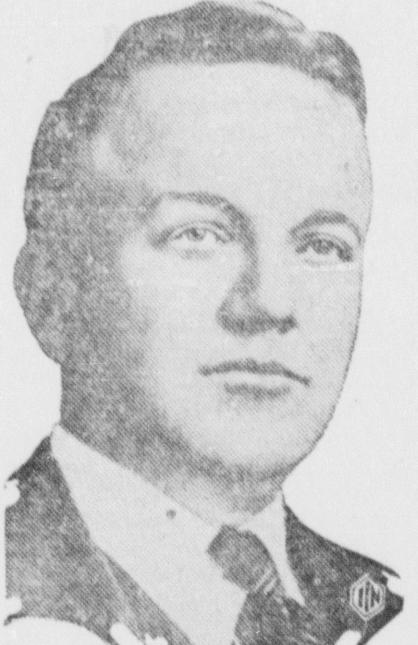

During the hearing, Love became greatly confused on the witness stand when District Attorney Eastburn showed him an order book that was taken from him the night of his arrest by State Police. In the book were various names and figures that Love hesitatingly explained to the Court. Such items as kettles and coke were listed and priced. Love told Judge Keller that he used the kettles, one marked at $500, at his home in Philadelphia for "washing" purposes.

William LeMasney, of near Langhorne, was acquitted yesterday by a jury in No. 2 Court on a charge of illicit exposure brought by Mrs. Anna M. Bednar, proprietor of a restaurant on the Lincoln Highway near the Trappe. She charged that LeMasney made improper approaches to her on the early morning of January 15 when he came into the restaurant. In defense, LeMasney said that Mrs. Bednar must have been mistaken in her identity. The defendant called a number of character witnesses and others who traced the young man's whereabouts the night and early morning of the alleged attack.

Steve Sabo, twenty-two, of 3 Madison street, Trenton, and Frederick Eckle, twenty-two, of 123 Ferry street, Trenton, pleaded guilty yesterday to fire prevention equipment and other details.

WARNS OF SOVIET AGENTS ACTIVE IN INDUSTRIES

Joseph McLaughlin, Internal Revenue Collector, Gives Interesting Address

PATRIOTISM IS STRESSED

In an address scintillating with patriotism, humor and fact, the speaker at the weekly luncheon of the Bristol Rotary Club yesterday succeeded in making a dry subject one of keen interest and of a very informative nature.

The speaker was Joseph McLaughlin, Collector of Internal Revenue for the Philadelphia district. Mr. McLaughlin was accompanied by two of his deputies, Assistant Chief Field Deputy, E. R. Appenzeller, and Deputy Internal Revenue Collector, John V. Turner. Mr. Turner's headquarters are here at Bristol.

"Amos 'n' Andy" have lightened the work of our Bureau considerably," was the comment of Mr. McLaughlin. "People have been rushing in to pay far earlier than they would have done had it not been for 'Amos 'n' Andy.' If those two gentlemen are not on the governmental payroll—they should be," commented the speaker.

"The intricacies of the income tax to some, are like the old puzzle, 'How old is Ann?' I have with me today both 'Amos 'n' Andy' in the person of Mr. Turner and Mr. Appenzeller," said Mr. McLaughlin. "If you want any information, aid or assistance in compiling your income tax, just consult 'Amos 'n' Andy.'"

The speaker went on to explain how years ago, the government received a large proportion of its revenue from distilled liquor sales, but now it is the income tax which produces the money.

"Income is ability to pay," said Mr. McLaughlin. "Uncle Sam doesn't want any tax from other than those who are able to pay it," he said. "The more prosperity Uncle Sam has, the greater are the increases in the exemptions granted. The exemption for single men used to be $1000; now it is $1500—for married men it was formerly $2500; now it is $3500. The interest has been reduced from one percent to half of one percent on the first $4000 and if you should overpay your income tax, you will receive a refund, if you live long enough to get it back.

"My commission is to 'make tax paying popular,'" said the speaker. "President Hoover recently said that 75% of every dollar of Federal taxes was spent for the support of the army and navy; hence the parley which is being held in London now."

The speaker aroused keen interest on the part of his audience when he took up for discussion the efforts being made by agents of the Soviet government in Russia to undermine the industries and the confidence of workers in American industries.

"Soviet agents are going through industrial plants in America to find flaws and to encourage workers to make flaws in the products so that the consumer will be dissatisfied with American made goods. $1,250,000 is being spent to spread this propaganda, I am told," said Mr. McLaughlin. "The Soviets in Russia are trying to turn Europe upside down. You read in the public press the other day of their attack on the Vatican. They claim that in a few years the Vatican will be one gigantic museum and they will use it as a revenue producing affair. They are tearing down churches in Russia; they are driving professors and teachers of religion out of Russia; and they are coming to the United States.

"You men all know that at the present time we have much unemployment in our country, and these Soviet agents are spreading their propaganda among the unemployed.

NEW TRIAL PLEA REFUSED WOMAN GUILTY OF MURDER

Judge Sam'l E. Shull Declines
New Trial for Mrs. Maria
Tilotta

GOES TO JAIL FOR LIFE

Last Chapter Written in Murder Case Which Aroused
The Community

DOYLESTOWN, Feb. 21.—Judge Keller yesterday announced the decision of Judge Samuel E. Shull, of Stroudsburg, in refusing Mrs. Maria Tilotta, of Bristol, a new trial on a charge of murder. She was recently convicted of first degree murder with life imprisonment imposed as the penalty.

Mrs. Tilotta was accused of having plotted with her alleged lover, Giuseppe Guida and Giacomo Giaccardo, the murder of her husband, Giovanni Tilotta, so that she and Guida could go away together.

Guida went to the electric chair for the crime. Giaccardo is serving a life sentence and now the woman will begin her term.

Frank Gallone, twenty-two, of Bristol, escaped a prison sentence yesterday when he pleaded guilty before Judge Hiram H. Keller on a charge of possessing and manufacturing intoxicating liquor. He was fined $100 and costs.

In pronouncing sentence, Judge Keller remarked that the "higher-ups" in this case were at large and that it was possibly true that Gallone, who had only been at work at the still located on a farm near Frosty Hollow, Middletown township, for four hours, was simply a "fireman," whose duty it was to attend to the boilers.

State Police raided the farm on December 10 and found six 500-gallon vats in a barn on the farm. Gallone was in charge of the boilers and nobody else was about the place.

Gallone told Judge Keller that he had been out of work for two months and that a stranger came up to him one morning and asked him if he wanted a job. He said yes, and the stranger took him to the farm to work where he found a still. Gallone said that he objected at first but that the stranger coaxed him to stay just a couple of hours and promised him that he would come after him and take him home. In the meantime the State Police from Morrisville arrived.

In cross-examination, District Attorney Eastburn asked Gallone whether he was the son of the Gallone whose place was raided near Tullytown about a year ago when a large still was confiscated, and the defendant nodded yes but denied that he was living at home at the time.

Watching the Weather With Uncle Sam

A Series of Talks by Welby R. Stevens
(Assistant Weather Forecaster, U. S. Weather Bureau)

Next to the tornado, the hurricane is the most severe type of storm. The amount of damage and loss of life averages higher in hurricanes, however, because they are much larger and persist for a greater length of time. A hurricane is in progress for more than a week as a rule, while a tornado covers its entire path in a couple of hours or less.

June to October is known as the hurricane season. We have records of only three that have developed in any other months since 1856. The height of the season is reached during August and the first part of September. Over 50% originate in this period of approximately six weeks.

During the early and latter parts of the season most of the hurricanes develop either over the western portion of the Caribbean Sea or the Gulf of Mexico. In the middle of the season the great majority develop to the east of the Windward Islands in the region southwest of the Cape Verde Islands.

The majority after a westward movement of greater or lesser length recurve to the northward, finally turning to the northeast. Some, however, move without recurve to Central America, Mexico, and the west Gulf Coast, and a few even to the South Atlantic Coast of the United States. The recurve may take place at almost any point, some recurring northward in the Gulf of Mexico, others off the Atlantic Coast and still others to the east of Bermuda.

Hurricanes are nearly circular in form. When they are well-developed they are usually 200 to 300 miles in diameter, but near their origin some may be no more than 50 miles across. The average speed with which the center moves is between 10 and 15 miles per hour but the wind, since it blows spirally inward toward the center, has a velocity many times that amount.

One peculiar feature of a hurricane is its well-marked center. As the storm approaches the wind rages with great violence, usually between 75 and 120 miles, but occasionally as much as 150 per hour. Rain falls in torrents. But in the center the wind drops to a light breeze, rain ceases and sometimes blue sky may be seen through breaks in the clouds. The diameter of the center may be from 8 to 30 miles. As the hurricane continues to travel and the center passes over the observer the winds rise again as abruptly as they dropped and attain a violence equal to that they had before, but from the reverse direction. Heavy rain again falls. On account of the peculiar characteristics of the center it is often referred to as the "eye of the storm." People who experience a hurricane often believe that the storm is over, when in reality they may be near the center. They go about their duties, often remove barricades that had been erected for protection against the storm and are thus caught unawares, when after a half hour or so the storm resumes its fury.

During the hurricane season the Weather Bureau is constantly on alert to detect the first signs of the development or approach of these storms in order that people and ships in the danger area may be adequately warned and seek safety. A large amount of credit for the success that has been attained in this work is due to the interest of the personnel of the vessels and the fidelity with which they transmit their observations to us by radio.

FAMILY REUNIONS

Family ties are said not to be as close as they used to be, and yet many families are having reunions where a large number of near and distant relatives are gathered together. Interest in genealogical research is said to be increasing, and many people are anxious to find out who their ancestors were and where they came from, and the desire to know the members of one's old family tribe will never disappear.

An obstacle in the way of such associations is created by the scattering of families all over the country. Where a family used to settle down in its home town or nearby, the present generation is likely to scatter all over the land, and some may go to foreign nations. Yet as people travel more easily than formerly, many may come from distant points when the tribe holds its powwow.

Back in old history people looked to their families for protection. Tribe fought against tribe, and if you were attacked and your safety assailed, your government might not be able to do anything for you, but your kinsmen would rally and beat off the tribe that menaced you.

Those old times of tribal warfare are happily gone forever. But the members of a family tribe now can reflect that they no doubt share certain traits handed down from common ancestors. Hence they should have ideas in common, and when they get together they should have important elements of congeniality that run deep in their natures.

SELF VALUATION

Without ostentation man should value himself more highly than is his wont. It is one of man's faults that he undervalues himself, lacks confidence in his ability and admits to himself that he "can't." It is possible to know thyself, and for man to achieve something worthwhile in this world he must believe in himself for his full worth.

"Sweetshadeth" is applied to persons who affect qualities unpossessed. One can be self-confident without being complacent and presuming. Man may know himself, that in truth, is the secret of success among men.

The higher a man's valuation of himself, the more his compassion and charity for his fellowmen. There is no condescension in his manner because realizing a value in himself he unconsciously seeks out values in others.

One cannot expect the world to count him as of intrinsic worth if he himself does not recognize that worth. It becomes so much a part of our thought structure and our very personality that it plainly manifests itself in our words and acts. Unostentatious self-confidence is natural expression of personal evaluation. Vain boasting is a cloak to conceal natural weakness and failings. He who brags is painfully aware of his shortcomings; otherwise he would be conscious of nothing to boast about.

Self-confidence is the recognition of shortcomings overcome. Boasting is the recognition of shortcomings to be overcome.

Becoming enraged he hits Phillips, and in falling the manager strikes his head and dies. Joe is sentenced to prison for one year for manslaughter. His cell mate talks of the disgrace a convicted wife and children suffer. Joe determines that Katherine and his young son, Little Pat, must be saved. When his wife arrives on visiting day, Joe accuses her of being intimate with the doctor for whom she is a nurse, saying he never wants to see her again.

CHAPTER XIX—Continued
In the early afternoon sun that was warming the spring greens into bloom, Little Pat walked down the steps of the hospital, his mother holding one hand, his Uncle Robert the other. It was still a little chilly, and the child was buttoned up in a heavy coat, his cap pulled well down over his forehead. He was taller; he had grown during his stay in the hospital. But he looked as chubby as ever. Joe thought as he ducked back around the corner of the building, keeping out of sight. And he walked! Just a little unsteadily, perhaps, but that would be only temporary. He walked!

As Dr. Merrill lifted the child into his car beside Katherine and got in himself, Joe signalled a cruising cab.

"Follow that car!" He pointed out to the driver the surgeon's motor just starting down the street. He slipped five dollars into the man's hand. That five dollars meant a lot to Joe, but it was worth anything just to catch another glimpse of the child he loved.

So that's the way it would be from now on. Joe stared hard at the automobile his own driver was so carefully trailing. Katherine and Dr. Merrill and Little Pat. Those three together. And no standing at ways on the outside looking in. "Surprise, Junior!" Katherine tried to make her voice gay as she ushered the way into her apartment. "See what Uncle Robert brought for you?" She uncovered a most intricate mechanical toy doll made of wooden balls that walked and jumped.

Junior nodded. But his eyes were searching the room, and a troubled frown appeared on his chubby face. He disregarded the toys and reached for his slate, printing carefully in cello on it, and then held it up to his mother. "We dady not kum?" Katherine read.

She hesitated for a moment. "Daddy's gone away on a long trip, Junior," she said at last. "But he sent you his love and said he would be back. Now run along and play with your toys while mother talks to Uncle Robert."

Katherine drew Dr. Merrill aside. "Isn't there anything you can do to restore his voice, Robert?"

Dr. Merrill shook his head. "There isn't anything that surgery can do, dear." He had answered this same question a thousand and one times.

"Well, aren't there any records of such cases being cured?" the girl persisted.

"Sometimes a shock will do it. But science is helpless. I've tried everything. You know that."

"Isn't it possible to devise some shock, then?"

Dr. Merrill smiled patiently. "If it were, I'd do it. But it's usually just something that happens. Meantime, I'll keep looking after him, and you take the week off and stay with him. After that we'll decide what's to be done."

CHAPTER XX
The public telephone in Moritz's Cafe broke the afternoon quiet with a persistent jangling. Joe,

Mrs. Ernest Wichterman is confined to her home with a bad cold and sore throat.

Mr. and Mrs. Earl Fries and family spent Monday evening visiting Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Barrah, of Baxter avenue.

The Men's Club met as usual in the basement of King's Hall and all enjoyed a pleasant evening. There were four tables of pinochle. Mr. Youngman won first prize; Robert Fries, second; Thomas Andrew, third, and Forrest Jackson won fourth prizes. A sitting in a corner reading a paper, got up to answer. "Hello," he called. "Moritz's Cafe." "May I speak to James Lang, please?" "This is Joe Lane, Dr. Merrill." The song plugger recognized the voice. "Has anything happened?" he questioned fearfully. "No, nothing," the surgeon assured him. "But I would like to have a little talk with you. Would it be possible for you to come to my office this afternoon?"

Joe looked over his shoulder and inspected the tables. The "set-ups" were all ready for the dinner trade. "Why—yes," he agreed. "If you want me to."

The long, subway ride uptown seemed interminable. What could Dr. Merrill want with him now? The thought puzzled him. The surgeon had said that nothing had happened. Then why had he called? He would have told him if Little Pat had got his voice back again. It couldn't be that. And that was what mattered most. He stepped off the train, still bewildered, and walked over to the East Sixty-sixth street office.

Once again he stood in the familiar waiting room. But now there were no patients there.

Dr. Merrill got up. He was evidently finding it hard to say what he wanted to say. "Look here, Lane," he started abruptly. "Why did you make that scene in prison the day Katherine went to see you? Why did you tell her to get a divorce—why did you tell her you never wanted to see her again? Why did you think that I was involved?"

"Say, what is this?" Joe jumped to his feet. His eyes were glittering and his old fighting, antagonistic spirit suddenly came to the fore. "This ain't your business? I didn't come here to be cross-questioned."

"Sorry, Lane!" The doctor's voice was apologetic but firm. "I didn't mean it that way. Please believe me when I say that I'm not trying to interfere in any of your affairs, but that I'm trying to be of some help to all of us."

Joe averted his eyes like a sulky child. Inwardly he was ashamed of his outburst, and yet ashamed that he was ashamed.

"Yes, doctor," Joe answered at last. "I never was bitter against Katherine. I know I said some pretty rotten things. But I wanted to make her cut loose from me, see? I knew I couldn't make her happy. An' I thought—well, I thought you used to be in love with her, an'—an' I guess that's what got me started off on that track."

"I see," Dr. Merrill paused thoughtfully. "You felt that she and the child would be better off without you?"

"Yep, that's it. Oh, don't think it was easy, doc, doctor. I loved Kitty then, better than anything else in the world—Kitty and Little Pat. And I still love her. But that don't matter any more. I fought that all out in jail. I decided to give them up."

"You sent her away from you, just when you needed her the most. And you loved her all the time?"

Dr. Merrill smiled a little. No one would ever know what he was going through at this moment—no one ever would know, except himself. From the time that Joe had brought the child back to him to be taken care of, his attitude towards the song plugger had changed. He felt that he understood that message of Joe's to Katherine, but he wanted to make sure, no matter how much that knowledge cost him.

"How's the job?" he asked suddenly.

Joe looked up in surprise. The surgeon had never before asked him about any of his present affairs.

"It's all right. I'm—I'm a waiter now, and sometimes I do a little singing at night. It keeps me out of mischief, I guess, an' no one ever bothers me. I like it enough."

Dr. Merrill frowned. There was a sort of hopeless apathy in Joe's voice. It said far more than Joe said with words. It told of a struggle, and then the lack of desire to do anything else. It told of looking ahead at empty years to come—years that would never again hold out bright promises. It told of a weary soul that had been tempted, and had overcome the temptation only to find that there was nothing more to be done.

"Well, I guess I better be going," Joe rose, his hat in his hand. "You—you don't think there's any chance for the kid's voice?"

"I'm afraid not," the surgeon said gently. "Only a miracle can help."

On, and on, and on. Joe's feet beat out a steady pace on the sidewalk. Little Pat would never speak again, unless a miracle happened. How could you make a miracle happen? How? How? Couldn't anybody tell him? Any of these people who thronged the streets?

Washington, The Man, Is Told of In Speech Here

"At the age of nineteen, he took a commission from the State of Virginia, and entered into the French and Indian wars. After this he went with his brother to the West Indies. While there his brother died, leaving him his estate. It was in this way that he came into the possession of Mount Vernon.

"At the age of twenty-seven he married Mrs. Martha Custis, a widow with two children. She was noted for two things—wealth and beauty. No one would ever say that he married her for money, but her money came in good place during the revolutionary times, and enabled him the better to serve his country. At the age of forty-two he became a member of the first General Conference of the Colonies, and at the age of forty-four, he was through the influence of John Adams, selected as commander-in-chief of the American forces.

"He remained at the head of the army for seven long years, during which time his foot never stepped across the threshold of his home. Two battles at least during this period show great military genius, and would have been worthy of Napoleon—the battles of Germantown and Trenton. Washington crossing the Delaware on a stormy night in mid-winter, when the river was running high and was full of ice was like Napoleon crossing the Alps. For his service during the Revolutionary war he took no remuneration whatever. That shows where his heart was and for what he was fighting. He was ambitious—not for self, but for country. He fought not for glory, but for a cause he believed to be right.

"The war over, was Washington's work through? No! It was only half through. Many more years of service were required from him upon the part of his country.

"The states free, a new era opened before America. God had brought the states through the great struggle, but danger was not over for them. War had united them, but the war was over, they were in danger of falling all through the republic and then a thousand chimes burst forth in musical notes of joy, and a thousand guns answered with their voice of hearty salute. Having served his country as president for eight years, Washington retired to the privacy of his home at Mount Vernon, and lived in quietness until death called him to take up his march to the throne of God. When he died all America mourned for him, and even the flags of Britain floated at half mast. As Goldwin Smith says: 'England felt that he had only fought against the government of George III, and not against England.'

"Such is our Washington. Today we stand in his presence and feel his power. We do this as part of our education. It is one of the most hopeful of all our human attributes that we have the capacity to be touched and thrilled and inspired by those who are above us. It is the germ and promise of progress. We are educated by our admirations. I rejoice that this is so, because I remember that Washington calls out the admiration of all America. He educates the American citizen. He refines him. He elevates him. Do you not see the civic precepts shining out from his life in letters of gold? I do.

"It was to found an American commonwealth that Washington gave his life. It was for American ideas that he fought. When his soldiers wanted him to crown himself as king, he refused, because he believed that every man in the republic is a king. The American idea proclaims the liberty of the individual and the value of the one man.

"Free thought, free speech, free school, free ballot, a free press; these are all American ideas. Washingtonism consists in standing for the defense of these. Intense Americanism consists in the same thing.

"Intense Americanism requires us also to look after the integrity and the wholeness of our nation. We must see to it that there shall be no division of loyalty on the part of its citizens. "There is only one legal way of transporting the waters of the Danube and the Rhine, and the Seine and the Thames, and the Tiber that they may flow peacefully in the channels of the Hudson, and the Charles, and the Connecticut, and the Merrimac, and the Columbia and the Mississippi. That way is by evaporation and condensation. The evaporation takes place in Europe; the condensation takes place here in the American atmosphere. Let us see to it that the process that takes place in our American skydome shall be so complete that each drop of water distilled shall be so American that there shall not be in it the least taint or tinge of Danube, Rhine, Seine, Thames, or Tiber. On American soil race should merge into race as crystal water merges into crystal water, to flow on as a sparkling river of life.

"Let there be one country for all; one standard of loyalty for all; one class for free, public, State, non-sectarian schools for all; one sacred ballot-box for all; one type of citizenship for all; one Declaration of Independence for all; one national language for all; and one sovereign for all, and that the sovereign will of the people, exercised according to the spirit and purpose of the National Constitution."

ATTEND FUNERAL

Miss Janet Barnes, Mrs. Elizabeth Cox and Dr. P. H. Freeman, of Philadelphia, attended the funeral of Miss Elizabeth Newhall, Rosetree Road, Media, a few days ago. Miss Newhall, who was day supervising nurse at the Episcopal Hospital, Philadelphia, met her death in an automobile accident Saturday morning. Services were held in St. Thomas' Church, White-marsh.

Battles for Her Life—and Wins

Little 7-year-old Leona Smith rests weakly but happily on her cot at Sinai Hospital, Baltimore, Md., following one of the most daring bids that science can make for the life of a human. Probing dangerously close to the heart, Dr. Alfred Ullman succeeded in slitting the membranous sac that surrounded the organ, thereby releasing eight ounces of pus, a fluid which had been eating away the life of the child.

"POSTERS"

By Margaret McKerson

The fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth grades are making posters for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Society. They must be free-hand drawing and the pupils are allowed to make as many posters as they wish, but every person is required to make at least one.

Five dollars is the first prize for the best poster made. Ten dollars worth of books are given to the second best poster. If you get a prize in Pennsylvania you have a chance of your poster going to Albany, New York, and receiving another prize.

The first, second, third and fourth grades are making posters also, but they are not free-hand drawing, they are supposed to portray kindness to animals, the feeding and care of them, for idea of correction of cruelty to animals. The first, second, third and fourth grades are cut out pictures of animals such as cows, dogs, cats, etc.

Each poster must have the pupil's name, their school and their grade. It must all be done on regular school drawing paper. The posters must be all the same size and all work must be finished by March 15, 1930. The best posters from every grade are picked by the teachers and sent in. The grades are divided into two parts, the first, second, third and fourth grades, and the fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth grades.

"OUR SCHOOL"

By Francis Plidum

A group of boys are making a model of our school. It is to be made of paper mache. It will also be made by scale, being three and two-fifths inches high, three inches wide, and twenty-seven inches long.

The work has been coming along fine and we expect it to be done in the near future.

Young Rejected as N. Y. State Regent

"Federal taxes are being used to detect the activities of these agents and these insidious foes of our government."

Then, reading extracts from speech-

Professor Honored At Temple University

Dr. Chevalier Jackson, professor of bronchology in Temple School of Medicine, Philadelphia, was awarded the degree of doctor of laws at the mid-Winter commencement exercises at Temple University, which were held in connection with the annual founder's day.

of Daniel Webster on the Constitution, Mr. McLaughlin dwelt upon the sacredness of this governmental instrument. He explained at length attacks being made upon the Constitution and the effort to undermine it. "In the halls of Congress we have men who cancer-like are attempting to undermine the Constitution and the respect of the people for it. This government will stand or fall as a unit. A portion of its people have no right to say what part of the Constitution they will observe and what portion they will disobey."

"The 18th Amendment is in the Constitution just the same as any other amendment is there. It is there the same as the 16th Amendment, which provides for the Income Tax." The speaker explained how a few days ago a Philadelphia Congressman had very adroitly explained the manner in which the 18th Amendment could be made null and void. He said that in the 18th Amendment there is no penalty provided for its violation and that if in states which had enacted concurrent legislation, as requested, would rescind that legislation and that if Congress concurrently would wipe out the Volstead Act that there would be no penalty attached for its violation and that hence the 18th Amendment would be made null and void without the necessity of going to the people to get three-fourths of them to vote approval to make this amendment null and void."

Having impressed his audience with the fact that every patriotic and American loving citizen should pay his or her taxes without equivocation, Mr. McLaughlin concluded by stating that anyone desiring to ask questions was privileged to do so and that they would be answered, if possible, by Mr. Appenzeller. A number of questions were asked and the answers were intelligently, fully and completely given.

NASH "400"

NASH is the car with the OIL CUSHIONED CHASSIS SUPERIOR PERFORMANCE!

EVERY Nash "400" model, including those of lowest price, is now equipped with a modern system of centralized chassis lubrication. Nash "400" chassis bearings ride on a cushion of oil. Not just once in a while, or for a day or so after you happen to put your car in a service station for greasing. But every day, and without the bother of service station attention, the "400" chassis gives you the riding smoothness and the longer chassis life that only perfect chassis lubrication can give. And every Twin-Ignition Eight and Six model is now built with lifetime lubricated springs—lubrication sealed inside flexible steel spring covers—permanent protection against rust, squeaks, wear and ineffectual spring action. The combination of centralized lubrication and lifetime lubricated springs creates an oil-cushioned chassis—another reason for the superior performance that distinguishes the 1930 Nash "400!"

Rep. Linthicum (D) of Maryland, chairman of the House "wet bloc" was enthusiastic over the House hearing on repeal or modification of the Eighteenth Amendment.

Somewhat disappointed that Gen. W. W. Atterbury, president of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and P. S. DuPont, Wilmington, Del., capitalist, had been unable to reach Washington for the hearings, he promised to present them next week.

Ex-Chief of Police Collins and at least one other prominent Chicagoan will be called, Rep. Sabath (D) of Illinois announced.

Linthicum said wet leaders had been overwhelmed with offers of wets to testify before the House committee.

"NO WORDS CAN DO JUSTICE TO FAMED KONJOLA"

New Medicine Brings Back Health After Five Years' Illness

MRS. J. D. PRANTZ

"No words can do justice to famed Konjola," said Mrs. J. D. Prantz, 419 Indiana street, Punxsutawney. "My system had become terribly run down from stomach, kidney and bowel troubles. Food of the plainest kind caused frightful pain from bloating. My kidneys were so weak that frequent night risings were necessary, and my nerves became shattered, causing me to be subject to spells of melancholy. "After the third bottle of this new medicine a remarkable change began to take place in me. My stomach no longer bloated after meals and my appetite improved wonderfully. My kidneys became normal. I slept well at night and the nervous condition which had bothered me so much passed away. My bowels function perfectly and I am free from constipation. My general health is better than it has been in years."

Konjola is sold in Bristol at Hoffman's Cat Rate store, and by all the best druggists in all towns throughout this entire section.—(Adv.)

JAY VEES AND VARSITY BOTH MEET DEFEAT

Last night's games spelled defeat once more for both the Jay Vees and the Varsity squads of Bristol High School. Although both teams played a short snappy game, they failed to get revenge from their rivals, who once before this season overwhelmed the locals.

The final score for the Jay Vees was 26-27 in Trenton's favor, while the varsity was beaten to the score of 43-28.

The Jay Vees had to play two extra quarters on account of the deadlock which occurred twice. Rivalry was keen and fast play was the feature of the game. Dorsey and White starred for Bristol. White also was high scorer.

In spite of their effort to outwit the visitors the local five seemed to be out of place when they met the Trenton Junior No. 3 team for the second time this season. The game wasn't as exciting as it was expected to be.

Tonight both girls and boys will play.

Erwin T. Helsel Dies; Funeral To Be Monday

Death claimed Erwin T. Helsel, husband of Anna L. Helsel, at his home, 319 Washington street, last night. He deceased was in his 62nd year. He had been ill since Monday with pneumonia.
